Using Role Playing Games and Activities
To Teach about Latin America

Saturday, October 7
12:30-5:00pm (includes lunch)
(following the NCCLA annual conference a.m. sessions)

Madison, WI

The workshop is intended to build on the cross-disciplinary nature of the NCCLA and a broader network of regional Latin Americanists by bringing together faculty from a variety of fields to talk about a particular topic or pedagogical tool in an informal, roundtable format.

This year we will be talking about using role playing games and activities in the classroom. In particular, we will be playing part of the game, Reacting to the Past: Mexico in Revolution, 1912-1920 (https://reacting.barnard.edu/mex-rev). Each participant will have a role in the game (information will be forthcoming). We will also have time to share other examples of role-playing games and activities, and to talk about the challenges and rewards of using these games.

Cost: $20 (includes lunch)

To register:
Select the workshop option (and include $20) on the NCCLA 2017 conference registration form.

For more information: Eduardo Magalhães III (Simpson College):
eduardo.magalhaes@simpson.edu