Beginning in 1970, CIS indexed and abstracted the following kinds of congressional publications: Hearings; Committee Prints, containing research in the areas for which the various committees are responsible; House and Senate Reports, by which committees inform the House or Senate of their findings; House and Senate Documents containing presidential proposals for new legislation, executive agencies' annual reports and background information; Executive Reports and Treaty Documents, containing the text of presidential support for treaty ratification as well as committee recommendations; and Special Publications, which may contain any information not found in regular publications. CIS also indexes and abstracts Public Laws and provides citations for legislative histories of laws. Material is indexed by subject, title, author, and document number.

Description from the Library of Congress