The crises are, respectively, the 1964 anti-U.S. riots (and military confrontation in the Canal Zone) in Panama and the 1965 attempted ouster of a military junta in the Dominican Republic, met by U.S. military intervention. The collection documents the U.S. role and policy decisions in both of these international crises. It consists of correspondence, memos, statements, press-releases, opinion summaries, reports, and many telegrams between concerned parties and agencies, including the U.S. State Department, various U.S. military branches, the Joint Chiefs of Staff, prominent civilians, executive branch officials, the CIA, members of Congress, Panamanian and Dominican officials, the Organization of American States, and others.
