Features
The Zilber School of Public Health offers a professional Master of Public Health (MPH) degree to train the next generation of public health leaders. Students specialize in one of the following tracks:

- Biostatistics
- Community and Behavioral Health Promotion
- Environmental Health Sciences
- Epidemiology
- Public Health Policy and Administration

UWM’s Zilber School of Public Health is known for its emphasis on health equity, social and environmental justice, and community partnerships. The MPH degree program prepares students to make a difference in the public health field by building practical knowledge and skills, including the applied use of public health research to promote population health and health equity.

The MPH curriculum includes required core courses that help prepare students to analyze information and consider solutions to public health problems at the community, institutional, and societal levels. Students then put their skills into practice through a required field experience and capstone project.

Admission
An applicant must meet Graduate School requirements plus the following program requirements to be considered for admission to the program:

1. MPH Application Checklist;
2. Resume or CV;
3. Three letters of recommendation from persons familiar with the applicant’s academic experience and potential for graduate work in public health; and
4. Submission of scores from the General Test of the Graduate Record Examination (GRE), taken within the last five years.

These materials will be considered in a holistic admissions process with special attention to ensure a diverse student body.
