Supporting Military and Veteran Students at UWM

University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee

Military and Veterans Resource Center (MAVRC)

Spring 2015

Need for Advocacy Training

Why is student veteran advocacy training important?

- UWM has over 1000 military and veteran students
 - Largest enrollment in six state region
 - UWM's military friendly reputation
 - Education benefits as significant funding source
 - Principles of Excellence Executive Order (April 2012)
- Military and veteran students bring valuable strengths as well as transition-related challenges including:
 - Loss of structured environment and sense of direction
 - Disruptions in social support
 - Service-connected health concerns
 - Academic challenges and educational interruptions

Veterans on Campus: 3 Scenarios

Story 1: Student veteran Lena's redeployment discussion with front desk staff

Story 2: Student veteran Austin's challenging classroom discussion led by instructor

Story 3: Student veteran Chris' discussion on the military to college transition with instructor during office meeting

Course Feedback

Throughout each conversation, users receive narrated and animated feedback, which sometimes includes the option to undo the last decision. By making personal choices, users develop effective communication and gatekeeper skills.

Supporting Student Veterans

Scenario:

A student, who identifies as a veteran, walks into your office claiming to be struggling in the classroom. He says he's dropping out because his classmates are annoying and the instructor is terrible. He talks about re-enlisting. How do you proceed????

This scenario ONLY works if you are a UWM employee who has an office and might someday speak to a student.

Supporting Student Veterans

Tips for supporting student veterans:

- 1. Learn more about military and veteran student strengths and challenges.
- 2. Identify and challenge stereotypes about student veterans.
- 3. Reach out and get to know military and veteran students.
- 4. Encourage your colleagues to utilize this training program and to connect with MAVRC for additional information and resources.
