

Representing animals

a conference at the Center for Twentieth Century Studies University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee april 13-15, 2000

Nigel Rothfels and Andrew Isenberg, Conference Organizers

By tracing how animals have been represented in different contexts and by different practices over the course of the last two centuries, this conference will explore the connections between our understandings of animals and the historical and cultural conditions in which these understandings have been formed. The conference will move from discussions of the material presence of animals—of the changing place of animals in urban spaces and modern sensibilities, for example—to explorations of how contemporary media culture is shaping our fundamental cultural expectations of animals, of ourselves, and of our environments.

Special Presentation by

Jane Goodall

Made possible by UWM Union Programming and Union Sociocultural Programming, the Office of the Chancellor, the Zoological Society of Milwaukee County, and the Jane Goodall Institute
