

Shevaun Watson
Fall 2021

633G Course Description

ENG 633 is designed as a senior capstone research seminar in Rhetoric and Writing, which provides advanced English majors with opportunities to engage in sophisticated reading, writing and researching activities. This capstone will focus specifically on the broad theme of “Language and Difference.” As we will learn, both rhetoric and writing are capacious topics, encompassing a wide array of issues, theories and practices. Some of the most interesting and vexing issues within rhetoric and writing pertain to language and difference, such as language and gender, race, politics, globalization, technology, and so on. We have increasingly linguistically diverse populations in America and around the world, not to mention that language is always in the crosshairs of politics and public deliberations about different groups. Language and difference lie at the heart of 21st-century realities.