At the same time Germany was forming the Weimar Republic after World War I, a democratic regime emerged in the Arab world that was at once praised by Woodrow Wilson and feared by European leaders as a threat to their colonial occupations. The History Department invites you to the Jere D. McGaffey Annual Lecture to hear Dr. Elizabeth F. Thompson from American University explain how Britain and France colluded to destroy the fledgling Syrian Arab Kingdom and the profound consequences that have since reverberated throughout history.
