School of Education at UWM: Community Engagement & Education Bachelor of Science degree program

Effective Date: January, 2016

Review Date: January, 2019

Rationale: [Rationale for how these programs are related]

Northcentral Technical College offers a two-year degree in Human Services-Academic that focuses on preparing students to provide social services such as education, support, care, advocacy and/or crisis intervention. Increasingly Graduates are motivated to pursue a bachelor's degree, in order to enhance their skills and knowledge base, and to meet requirements for a variety of careers working with individuals, groups, and communities. The University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee's baccalaureate degree program in Community Engagement and Education provides students with a deep understanding of urban educational issues with a focus on the historical, political, economic and socio-cultural context of communities, schools and society. The program prepares students for a variety of non-school educational careers working in community-based and social service agencies focused on improving the lives of individuals of all ages, groups, and communities. In addition, the CEED BS degree program can be completed online, offering increased access for NTC students. Key components of both degrees include: cultural awareness, understanding of diverse cultural groups, and a commitment to social justice by supporting people and improving the communities in which we live.

This articulation between the Northcentral Technical College (NTC) Human Services-Academic Associate program, and the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee (UWM) Community Engagement and Education program (CEED) formally recognizes the transfer of credits from the NTC Human Services AAS program and outlines an efficient path to baccalaureate degree completion at UWM.
