This is a graduate seminar that provides an overview of the sociological understandings of health, illness, and health care. We will examine inequalities in health and health care as well as examine medicine as an institution. Students who are interested in understanding social inequality will gain an understanding of how axes of differentiation in society shape and are influenced by health and health care outcomes. Those who are interested in social institutions will gain an appreciation of medicine as an intriguing case to study issues such as institutional change, professional boundaries, and organizational behavior.

Embedded across weekly readings are several themes that appear in the medical sociology literature. These include classic themes such as medicalization and the boundaries of professional medicine to more contemporary themes such as the consequences of mass incarceration and the COVID-19 pandemic. We will also review several data sources and research methods, including “big data.”

Throughout each week, we will work toward the following:

- Sharpen written and oral communication skills
- Identify data sources for conducting research on health, illness, and health care
- Develop hypotheses and research questions about health, illness, and health care
- Develop connections between medical sociology and other research areas

CANVAS

Our course has Canvas website: https://uwm.edu/canvas/home/. You will use the same username (username@uwm.edu) and password that you use for your UWM email account. If you have any questions about content on the course website, please contact me. If you have questions about, or problems using, the Canvas website, please see this website for ways to contact them and receive help: https://uwm.edu/canvas/students/.

REQUIRED READING

All readings that are required for the class can be located on the course’s Canvas website.

COURSE REQUIREMENTS

Participation
For a seminar to be beneficial to all involved, students need to come prepared to participate and actually participate. We should all be expected to chime in as we have constructive additions, critiques, or questions to contribute to the group.

To encourage you to participate, every week, each student is required to identify two discussion questions and offer their initial thoughts or responses to the questions. I encourage you to use this to participate in discussion each week.

Co-Facilitate Discussion

At our first meeting, we will assign each student to co-facilitate 1-3 (depending on class size) of our weekly discussions. There are two parts to being a co-facilitator:

1. Present a 5-10 minute synthesis of the readings. The synthesis should be more than a summary of the readings. It may include overarching themes, an outline of the logic of the theoretical claims, theoretical or methodological critiques, and connections to content outside of this course (e.g., current news, everyday interaction, research studies not assigned in this course).
2. Initiate discussion by sharing your two discussion questions, as well as offer follow-up comments or questions as discussion progresses.

Research Paper

Each student will choose a class topic (or a closely related one) in which they are interested and write a 6000-9000 word essay (excludes abstract and references). The paper must either summarize findings from a study you conducted or propose one.

In addition to the research paper, students are required to submit a one-page memo detailing whether or not changes to the paper were made in response to a peer review and explaining why.

The final version of the research paper and the one-page memo is due on Canvas by: Thursday, May 19 at 4PM

Peer Review of Research Paper

Each student will be assigned the draft of one other student’s research paper to read and review. The purpose will be to not edit the other’s writing, but to identify any of the following: 1) ways to improve the logic of the theoretical claims; 2) relevant literatures that may help the writer; and 3) data sources that may be helpful for addressing the hypotheses or research questions.

The draft is due on the appropriate Canvas Discussion Board by: Thursday, April 28 at 4PM

The peer review of the draft is due on the appropriate Canvas Discussion Board by: Thursday, May 5 at 4PM

Presentation of Research Paper
On our last class meeting, each student will give a 12-15 minute PowerPoint presentation of their research paper and participate in a Q&A.

Presentations will occur during seminar on: Thursday, May 12

CREDIT HOURS

The university has asked departments to break down for students how much time they will spend working on various aspects of their classes.

As the UW System assumes “that study leading to one semester credit represents an investment of time by the average student of not fewer than 48 hours” (UWS ACPS 4), a 3-credit course such as this one will require a minimum of 144 (3 x 48) hours of your time. You may find it necessary to spend additional time on a course; the numbers below only indicate that the course will not require any less of your time.

- 37.5 hours in the classroom
- 75 hours preparing for class, which may include reading, note taking, completing minor exercises and assignments, and discussing course topics with classmates and the instructor in structured settings
- 31.5 hours preparing for and writing major papers and/or exams.
