URB STD 945   The Internal Structure of the City
(PhD & Master’s Core Course)

LEC 001   Anne Bonds   W   3:00-5:40 PM

Urban geographers traditionally have examined both the “internal” and “external” structure of cities in order to understand urbanization. The “external” focus examines links among cities and the development of urban systems while the “internal” approach considers patterns and processes occurring within cities. In this class, our focus will be on the internal structure of cities with a concentration on urban systems and the (re)production of inequality. We will begin the course with a consideration of key theoretical approaches within urban geography. The remainder of the course will be organized around themes of particular interest to urban geographers, including neoliberal restructuring and urban governance, difference, urban poverty and inequality, bodies and public space, and communities and contestation. Our focus will be predominantly on the North American experience. (SEE NOTE BELOW)

URB STD 965   Municipal Management

LEC 001   Kevin Lahner   W   6:30-9:10 PM

The political, social, and economic contexts in which the urban manager functions, with an emphasis on managing municipal service delivery and resources. Notes: Pub Adm 965(Pol Sci 965) & Urb Std 965 are jointly offered; they count as repeats of one another.

URB STD 983   Contemporary Urban Social Structure and Change
(PhD Core Course)

LEC 001   Jennifer Jordan   T   4:30-7:10 PM

This course is an interdisciplinary examination of theoretical and empirical approaches to the study of the city. We read foundational and cutting-edge research in an effort to establish a sense of the breadth and depth of urban studies today. This course exposes students to a wide range of work on the study of cities, in ways that will hopefully continue to inform their own research and writing and help them develop a sense of what conversations within urban studies you will be joining. We examine issues like urban inequality, the environment, collective memory, cities and culture, gentrification, segregation, and other fundamental aspects of the study of the city.

NOTE: PhD Students need to take 1 of 4 Core PhD/Master’s classes ( Urb Std 901, 913, 945, or 971) in lieu of URB STD 984 which is no longer offered.

This is an experimental class that combines primary research and analysis, visual storytelling, and the fabrication of a digital and physical exhibit on environmental justice. Our focus will be the built environment of Milwaukee’s North Side. We are interested in narrating a compelling story of economic, environmental, racial, and policy-based injustices that plague this area. Student work will contribute to an international exhibition produced by the Humanities Action Lab (www.humanitiesactionlab.org). This exhibit will be hosted at the Mobile Design Box during the Summer 2020 DNC convention in Milwaukee.

The first part of the course will focus on readings on environmental justice. The second part will focus on data analysis and storytelling around issues such as housing justice, transit justice, food justice, jobs inequality, incarceration, climate justice (air quality, brownfields etc.), and health justice (access to green space, crowding). Much of the data, drawn from Milwaukee’s North Side neighborhoods, has already been collected and needs to be organized as a coherent exhibit. Some additional research and data collection may be necessary. The final section of the class will focus on visualizing and fabricating an exhibit. Part of the exhibit will travel across the world to major museums and universities while a larger local exhibit will be exhibited at local venues.

Topic: Place Stratification

LEC 002      Marcus Britton  R      4:30-7:10 PM

Place is a notoriously slippery concept. Moreover, the growing importance of telecommunications, computerization, and globalization has raised serious questions about its continued relevance in contemporary societies. And yet, mechanisms for “putting people in their place” arguably remain a fundamental aspect of social organization. These mechanisms allocate people to both positions in social hierarchies and locations in geographic space, not infrequently dramatically transforming the physical world in the process. This course focuses on the structure and development of hierarchical relationships between and among places, as well as the consequences of these relationships for broader systems of social stratification. We will devote particularly close attention to places such as more and less urbanized regions, metropolitan areas, cities and towns, and neighborhoods, especially but not exclusively in the United States.
